Synopsis:

It's part of human nature to look for something you do not have. Take Amu, a 4th grade transfer student who is considered a lone wolf. She's fashionably cool, tough and independent. She's a girl who seems unapproachable both at home and at school.

But it's just a role she is playing, unconsciously and unwillingly. In fact, like most other girls, Amu is childish, timid and romantic. Wishing to behave the way she really feels, one night she goes to bed praying for a miracle to happen, only to wake up the following morning to discover three colorfully decorated eggs laid on her bed. Did she produce them herself? From that morning on, Amu is shocked to find herself starting to behave the way she really feels. When these eggs hatch open, a little Guardian Character emerges out of each of them to help Amu express her different selves. To Amu's further surprise, she is invited to join the pupils' council of her school. Amu realizes that the council, considered by many to be another world reserved to the elites, is made up of kids who all have eggs similar to hers. What on earth are they up to? Amu's adventure has just begun!
